The Pépin-Robarts Commission, also named the Task Force on Canadian Unity, was created by the federal government on July 5th 1977 following the election of a pro-sovereignty government in Québec. The Commission was co-chaired by Jean-Luc Pépin, a former Liberal minister and John Robarts, the former Conservative Premier of Ontario. Others commissioners appointed to the Task Force on Canadian Unity included Richard Cashin, Muriel Kovitz, Ross Marks, John Evans, Solange Chaput-Rolland and Gérard Beaudoin.

The mandate of the Pépin-Robarts Commission was to obtain and publicize Canadians' views regarding the state of their country. From September 1977 to April 1978, the commissioners went on a tour of Canada in order to discuss various issues with Canadians, including the question of unity. The information gathered during their tour was released in their 1979 report. Among its recommendations were stated that language rights were the domain of provincial jurisdiction, the federal power be reduced and Senate be replaced by a Council of Federation appointed by provincial governments.

CUSTODIAL HISTORY
In March 1979, 24 boxes of documents were sent Archives and Special Collections where they are stored to this day.

SCOPE AND CONTENT
This collection consists of documents from the Task Force on Canadian Unity’s Information Centre, used the Pépin-Robarts Commission. The documents reflects various issues pertaining to, among others, Canadian politics, society, economy, views on Canadian unity and language policy.

The Pépin-Robarts Collection includes textual records, among others, press clippings from various newspapers, articles, transcripts of news broadcasts, pamphlets, reports, correspondence, booklets, one vinyl disc relating to the Task Force on Canadian Unity and various constitutions from other countries. Series 1 to 8 is arranged according to an original classification plan provided with the donation. Series 9 to 12 are composed of files not listed in the classification plan. In the majority of cases, the list follows a certain alphabetical order.

For conservation purposes, the press clippings were removed from the file of origin and replaced by a photocopy. The oversize material was also removed from its original file and stored in an oversize box.
